Venue: Neuer Jungfernstieg 21, Hamburg, Room 519

In recent years, social protests have marked political life in Latin America as much as in Europe. While some have responded to economic crisis and austerity measures, others have protested unfair distribution and corruption in economic boom phases. Both sides of the Atlantic have seen social mobilisation triggered by large-scale development projects, resource exploitation or processes of urban gentrification.

The panel will discuss the diverse experiences of social protest and democratic responses in Latin America & the Caribbean and in Europe and ask for the implications of these for democratic politics in both these world regions.

Registration is required by 8 October 2014:
